Becoming a Chartered Manager has given me the confidence I need to reach senior management and leadership roles in the future. As I go forward, I will remain committed to ongoing professional development in the management profession. Chartered status is an important international recognition and accreditation that solidifies my reputation as a respected and trusted professional. This new level of understanding has enriched my management knowledge and skills. As a Chartered Manager, I have a much greater strategic oversight of my contributions to the wider organisation.

According to the World Bank Group's 2020 report, Management Practices in Malaysia, "improving management practices can result in improved productivity of Malaysian firms."

To achieve this, the report cites policies including "improving learning opportunities among managers and employees" and "providing hands-on support and sharing better management and evaluation practices."

It highlights that "one challenge for Malaysia is the significant gap between managers' self-assessment of their performance and their actual performance."

CMI provides solutions for all these areas in the following ways:

-  Learning/training through our qualifications
-  Sharing better management practices through our events and thought leadership
-  Self assessment and evaluation practices through our Management Diagnostic tool and the self-reflection element of the Chartered Manager application process.
